ABSTRACT

A method of delivering information across a computer network includes receiving a request from a client program for user-selected information, and transmitting provider-selected

5   information in response to the request if no qualifying provider-selected message has been previously transmitted to the client program.